STEEL THAT FIGURED IN FIGHTS. An Attempt Being Made to Erect a

"I am g'ad to see that the mater pt made softable monument to Colonels David Crocket and Bowie and the other brave men who were treacherously kulled in the defense of the Alamo March 6, 1836, has liver to a healthy activity, without irritating or weakening them, use Syrup of been successful," says a writer in the Figs. Washington Sunday Heraid. "A braver deed than that defense does not live in the annals of American history. Of Crocket much has been written and but little of James Bowie, who was one of the most wonderful men of his day. The best account of him I have ever heard was related by Governor James Madison Wells of Louislana Returning Board fame. He knew Bowie intimately in his younger days. His account of the origin of the world-famed knife called after Bowie is most interest-knife called after Bowie is most interesting.

"In 1825 James Bowie was a large owner of claims to Spanish grants of land," said Governor Wells, "and as many of them were then occupied by planters who had to be ejected refore he could get possession, Bowie was constantly in danger of his life. He was a small man, not weighing more than 160 pounds, five feet seven and one-half inches in height, but of wonderful physical strength, and as lithe and quick as a panther. At the time he was living with his brother Stephen, in Louisiana on a plantation situated on a dividing line between the parishes of Lafourche with his brother Stephen, in Louisians on a plantation situated on a dividing line between the parishes of Lafourche and Assumption. Near them there was a blacksmith and worker in iron and steel of great skill. He was of Spanish or Portugese blood and had been, according to local rumor, one of Lafitte's crew of pirates. The pistols of that day were not as accurate or sure of fire as they are now. They were flintlocks, as percussion caps were not in general use until about 1826. Bowie had great taith in a knife. He declared that it was the surest and most faithful of all weapons in the hands of a man who could rely on his nerves, but that he had never seen a weapon of that sort which came up to his ideas of the most effective pattern. One day he and his brother Stephen were riding down the road and one of the hores casts shoe. They stopped at the blacksmith's mentioned to have it replaced. While waiting Bowie saw some fine workmanship on a sword, or rather Spanish machete, snd the thought occurred to him to have a knife made for defense and offense according to his notion by this blacksmith. There was a bundle of shingles near at hand, and taking one Bowie whittled out of the soft, thin pine a rough model in shape of what he wanted. The blacksmith had a long worn out file, which was used in the heaviest iron work, and out of this he made the knife which James Bowie used in twentytwo bloody encounters and finally died gresping it in his hand at the Alamo.

"I will describe it to you, for I have frequently seen and handled it," continued Gov. Wells. "It is seventeen and one-half will describe it to you, for I have frequently seen and handled it," continued Gov. Wells. "It is seventeen and one-half will describe it to you, for I have frequently seen and handled it," continued Gov. Wells. "It is seventeen and one-half will describe it to you, for I have frequently seen and handled it," continued Gov. Wells. "It is seventeen and one-half will be a proposition of the soft."

grasping it in his hand at the Alamo.

"I will describe it to you, for I have frequently seen and handled it," continued Gov. Wells. "It is seventeen and one-half mehes in the blade, two inches in width until within five inches of the point, when it widened a half inch and then curving backward a little ran off suddenly to a point. In weight it was just three pounds. The handle was made of the lower part of the horn of an elk sawed in two halves and neatly riveted into the sh-nk of the blade, the handle and blade being twenty-three inches in length, with a handsome blade, the handle and blade being twenty-three inches in length, with a handsome cross-piece where the two joined. The knife was ground down and then put on an oil stone until it was so sharp that it would shave the hair off one's hand, so ad mirable was its temper. The sheath was made of two pieces of thin pine wood neatly covered with alligator skin. It could be use for both cut and thrust, and it never faled when Jim Bowie got a fair blow."

Though Shaken Like a Leaf. By the most trival causes, weak nerves are easily susceptible of invigoration, a term which also imparts, in this instance, quietude. The nervous have but to use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters systematically to overcome that super-sensitiveness of the human sensorium, which is subversive of all bodily comfort and mental tran-quillity, and which reacts most hurtfully upon the system. The difficulty underly-ing this, as well as many other allments, is imperfect assimulation, no less than incom-plete digestion of the food. In the discharge of both the digestive and assimila-tive functions, the Bitters are the most potent, the most reliable auxiliary. As the body regains vigor and regularity by its aid, the brain and the nervous system are benefited.
